

VEN

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehemence; what a vengeance, emphatically what?

Till the day appear, of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.
When the same king adventured to murmur, the pope could threaten to teach him his duty with a vengeance. Raleigh.

Afnodeus the fishy fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Medea post to Egypt, there fast bound. Milton.
But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.

VENGEFUL. adj. [from vengeance and full.] Vindictive; revengeful; retributive.

Doubt not but God
Hath wifelier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.

VENIAL. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]

1. Pardonable; susceptible of pardon; excusable.

If they do nothing 'tis a venial slip. Shakespeare.
More venial is a dependence upon potable gold, whereof Paracelsus, who died himself at forty-seven, gloried that he could make other men immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What horror will invade the mind,
Shall have few venial faults to find? Rescramon.

While good men are in extirpating mortal sins, I should rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. Addison.

2. Permitted; allowed.

No more of talk where God, or angel-guest,
With man, as with his friend, familiar us'd
To sit indulgent, and with him partake Rural repast; permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

VENIALNESS. n. f. [from venial.] State of being excusable.

VENISON. n. f. [from venison, French.] Game; beast of chase;
the flesh of deer.

Shall we kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools Shou'd have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.

We have a hot venison patty to dinner. Shakespeare.

In the records of Ireland, no mention is made of any park, though there be vert and venison within this land. Davies's Hist. of Ireland.

He for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the venison shar'd. Dryden.

VENOM. n. f. [from venia, French.] Poison.

Your eyes, which hitherto hath borne in them
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks we fairly hope Have lost their quality. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Like some tall tree, the monster of the wood,
O'erhanging all that under him would grow,
He sheds his venom on the plants below. Dryden.

To VENOM. v. a. To infect with venom.

VENOMOUS. adj. [from venom.]

1. Poisonous.

Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thy eyes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

2. Malignant; mischievous.

A posterity not unlike their majority of mischievous progenitors; a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown.

This falsity was broached by Cocheus, a venomous writer;
one careless of truth or falsehood. Addison.

VENOMOUSLY. adv. [from venomous.] Poisonously; mischievously; malignantly.

His unkindness,
That strip'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties. These things sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

His praise of foes is venomously nice;
So touch'd, it turns a virtue to a vice. Dryden.

VENOMOUSNESS. n. f. [from venomous.] Poisonousness; malignity.

VEN. n. f. [from venia, French.]

1. A small aperture; a hole; a spiracle; passage at which any thing is let out.

On her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown;
The like is on her arm. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

stopple. Mortimer's Husbandry.

VEN

Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire, whereby it gains an exit. Woodward.

To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent;
or if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in.

Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.

Passage out of secrecy to public notice.

It failed by late setting-out, and some contrariety of weather, whereby the particular design took vent beforehand. Watson.

3. The act of opening.

The farmer's cadets mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a-while. Philips.

4. Emission; passage.

The smother'd fondness burns within him;
When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour, and desire of fame,
Drive the big passion back into his heart. Addison's Cato.

5. Discharge; means of discharge.

Had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words. Milton.

Land-floods are a great improvement of land, where a vent can be had. Mortimer's Husbandry.

For the mart, it was alledged that the vent for English cloaths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.

By this war there is no vent for any commodity but of wool. Temple's Miscellany.

He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in threefore can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope's Letters.

To VENT. v. a. [from venter, French, from the noun; venter, Italian.]

1. To let out at a small aperture.

Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds
They vented their complainings. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflows of their fancy that way. Denham.

Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.

2. To utter; to report.

Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.

4. To emit; to pour out.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

5. To publish.

Their sectators did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters, alter'd by profane additions, and disguised by poetical conversions. Raleigh.

6. To sell; to carry to sale.

This profitable merchandize not rising to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute to the owners not venting and venturing the same. Carew.

Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.

2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.

Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,
Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.

The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, confining the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray.

The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbutnot.

to issue from his belly.

VENTURE. n. f. [from aventure, Fr.]

1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.

When he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture, and absurd choice. South.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.

When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Lacke.

2. Chance; hap.

The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety, as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.

3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakespeare. Mer. of Venice.

On such a full sea are we now afloat:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.

4. At a VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.

You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.

A bargain at a venture made,
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.

Acquiescent and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture. L'Estrange.

Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.

If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure, unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.

To VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suit, will not in the conclusion lose both the suit and his own former favour. Bacon.

Origin mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the favour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

2. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suit, will not in the conclusion lose both the suit and his own former favour. Bacon.

tures to assure them that they would never be re-established,
since they had committed that horrid crime against the favour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

VER

2. To run a hazard.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.

I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.

3. To VENTURE at. To engage in; or make attempts To VENTURE on or upon. } without any security of success, upon mere hope.

That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.

It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.

I never yet the tragic strain essay'd,
Deter'd by that inimitable maid:
And when I venture at the comic stile,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as aurietas and fæxietas. Lacke.

Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Aterbury.

To VENTURE. v. a.

1. To expose to hazard.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight;
By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.

2. To put or send on a venture.

The fifth ventured for France, they pack in staunch hogheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.

VENTURER. n. f. [from venture.] He who ventures.

VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring, bold, fearless; ready to run hazards.

Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturous counsels, which no great or wise man would. Bacon.

He paus'd not, but with vent'rous arm
He pluck'd, he tasted. Milton's Par. Lost.

The vent'rous humour of our mariners costs this island many brave lives every year. Temple.

Savage pirates seek through seas unknown,
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.

VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturous.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.

Siege was laid to the fort by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than those were within the fort; venturosly indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them. Bacon.

VENTUROUSNESS. n. f. [from venturous.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.

Her coming into a place where the walls and ceilings were whited over, much offended her sight, and made her repent her vent'rousness. Boyle on Colours.

VERACITY. n. f. [from verax, Latin.]

1. Moral truth; honesty of report.

2. Physical truth; consistency of report with fact. Less proper.
When they submitted to the most ignominious and cruel deaths, rather than retract their testimony, there was no reason to doubt the veracity of those facts which they related. Addison.

VERACIOUS. adj. [from verax, Latin.] Observant of truth.

VERB. n. f. [from verbe, Fr. verbum, Lat.] A part of speech signifying existence, or some modification thereof, as action, passion. And withal some disposition or intention of the mind relating thereto, as of affirming, denying, interrogating, commanding. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Men usually talk of a noun and a verb. Shakespeare.

VERBAL. adj. [from verbalis, Fr. verbalis, Latin.]

1. Spoken, not written.

2. Oral; uttered by mouth.

Made she no verbal quest? —
Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shakespeare.

3. Consisting in mere words.

If young African for fame, a venture
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least; no more
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.

Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth. Glanville.

It was such a denial or confession of him as
